

*Without colour, what remains is form, light, and structure...
perhaps something closer to the essence of the subject.*

In the absence of colour, colour itself becomes imagined.